

On 14 February some students had the chance to go to “El teatro de la Paz” and enjoy the musical “A midsummer Night’s Dream”, an adaptation for English students of the well-known W. Shakespeare’s play. The young actors, members of Bedford Young Theater, knew very well how to capture the public’s attention.

Feedback coming from the students

“Even though certain parts of the play may have been difficult to understand for some people, we all agree that it was a fun experience and we strongly recommend it. The actors were young but it wasn’t bad, this fact made the performance even more interesting. I think we all loved the way they mixed acting with singing and jokes and how they interacted with the public. Performing any of Shakespeare’s plays must be very difficult but making the audience laugh and have a good time is even harder.

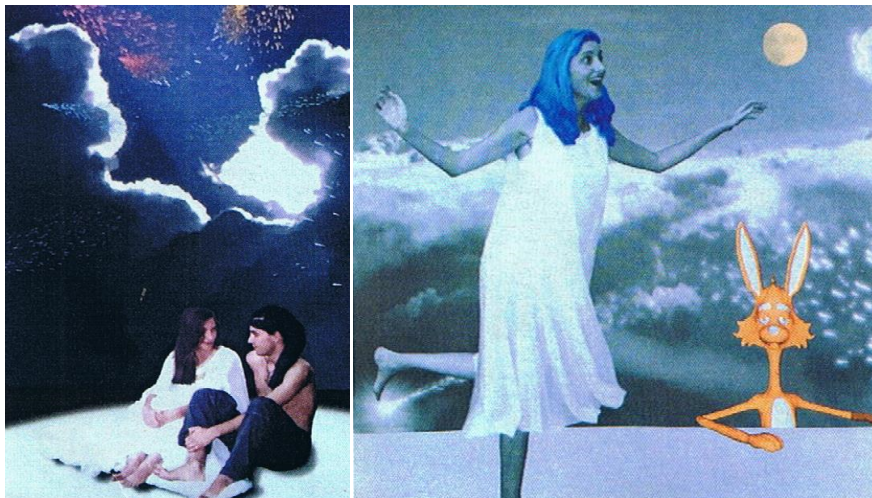

For my class, it has been one of the most amusing English activities we have participated in this year. We hope to do something similar any time soon. In general everything went well: we didn't have to take the bus to go to the theatre, the play didn't take long so we didn't miss many lessons and we were back to school in time to attend P.E. lessons.

If we compare it to other theatre activities, this experience was the best because you could hear more than one person speaking on the stage and the story they told was fantastic. So we can only say we had a great time"
